SYNOPSIS OF "HIS NIBS" - Starring Charles (Chic) Sale.

Various humorous rural types are introduced, the son of His Nibs, the girl at the piano, the local editor, the tenor singer, etc. You see "His Nibs" working at his old-fashioned projection machine, and you hear him tell the audience that as he did not think much of the titles in the picture that is to be shown, he cut them all out, but will tell the audience what is happening as the picture unreels. This picture within a picture is called "He Fooled 'Em All," and is a satire on the old-fashioned movie. It shows the boy in the small town, the slick fellow from the city who is stealing away the girl, and the boy leaving home in order to get rich. In the city the boy is swindled out of all his money, his clothes are stolen from him, and he is forced to go to work as a dishwasher to pay the board bill he has incurred. In the meantime the city chap has persuaded the girl and her rich father to visit the city, hoping to swindle them. They stay at the hotel where the boy is washing dishes, and he happens to see them with the swindlers. He gets away from the kitchen and tracks the swindlers, getting there in time to save the old man and his money. Instead of the customary happy ending, "His Nibs" tells his rural audience that he has cut out all the loving part at the end, but that the boy and girl get married just the same. The very end of "His Nibs" shows the end of the show, and the rural audience crowding out.
